

Role: Facilitator

Scenario: You scheduled vacation ahead of time. However, the supervisor says the company is short-staffed and has scheduled you to work

My course of action:

1. Look for a new job
2. See if it is possible to push back your vacation
3. Work from vacation
4. Negotiate some kind of financial compensation for working during my vacation
5. Quit on the spot if my financial situation is stable

There are no obvious environmental impacts in my scenario. There are various potential social impacts that my decision may have. First of all, if I end up not working at all, my co-workers will definitely be forced to work harder and my relationship with them will deteriorate. If I end up having to reschedule my vacation and was planning to go with friends, which would inconvenience them as well. There are also several economic impacts. If I ended up quitting right away, both my and the company's economic situation would be affected. The company would lose manpower and I would lose my wages. If the company is incapable of honoring its vacation policies then it would be in my best interests to find a better company to work at.